PHOTOGRAPHING OF IGOROTS AND NEGROS TABU

Assembly Passes Bill Making It Illegal to Take or Exhibit Them

[By Latest Mail]

MANILA, P. I.—Woe betide the amateur or professional photographer who dares to take a picture of an Igorot, a Negrito, a Tinguian or any member of any non or semi-civilized tribes of the Philippines of a Christian Filipino woman bathing in the river semi or entirely nude, or of a rice-bellied Filipino youngster, or of any subject in the nude, semi-nude and not altogether clothed.

For the Philippine assembly and with intent to protect the dignity of the Filipino people has passed a bill prohibiting under a penalty of fine and imprisonment, the taking of such picture or their exhibition, possession or use.

It was argued that such pictures tended to make it appear that the Philippines were inhabited by people in the nude. That people in Europe and in the United States, where such pictures were circulated, might go away with the opinion that the members of the august assembly gathered to legislate in the typical make-up of the well-known "Senator from Bontoc." That G-strings predominated in the islands and that the people were not the highly civilized people they were made to appear by the introduction into Washington and other large cities of the United States of picked Filipino youth specially chosen by Manuel Quezon to illustrate the degree of progress made by the "people" of the islands in the last decade or so.

Hawaii's Strategic Value

Sharp is the contrast between the pioneer New England missionaries to Hawaii, their descendants who have grown rich in commerce and the representatives of the United States army who are now pouring in and transforming the islands into an insular fortress, and outpost of the nation, says the Christian Science Monitor. How important is the latest phase of development may be inferred by a reading of the statement of General Wood, recently made to the United States Congress in an argument for increased appropriations for the Hawaiian military establishment.

Acquisition of the Philippines, construction and fortification of the Panama canal, and the course of events in the Far East, all lead military advisers of the government to put stress on Hawaii's strategic importance. For vessels of the fleet its waters are to be a depot and a refuge. From it, as a base of supply, both ships and troops are to be moved about the waters of the Pacific as occasion makes necessary. There, rather than on the Pacific Coast of the continent, the largest separate unit of the small national army is to be permanently stationed. For, as the outpost against which a hostile fleet would naturally first strike, it must be made as nearly invulnerable as possible. Moreover, should the United States at any time need to use its military forces on Asiatic soil, the problem of transportation will be partly through by the fact that Hawaiian garrison forces are well out on the way thither.

Hawaii, by reason of its latter-day characteristics as a human melting-pot, has become one of the most interesting social laboratories in the world. If to its already complex problems of a racial, religious, and economic sort be added those other factors, usually noticeable when large garrisons are set up, its officials and its citizens will need to provide an increasing measure of intelligence in order that the growing complexity of island conditions may not be overwhelming. It is to be hoped that General Wood has taken humanity's welfare as well as the nation's into consideration.
